

Tim Moore@glendon.yorku.ca wrote:

> Sorry about the delay. This information was forwarded to Associate > Professor Crozier many months ago. I had assumed that he was, in turn, > forwarding it to you. At any rate, teaching loads in this department are > assigned on the operating assumption that a full teaching load consists of > a total of 18 hours across the two terms of the academic year. The number > of contact hours associated with a given course varies, although a full > course is typically 6 hours. Half courses are either 3 or 4 hours. Some > courses with multiple lab sections have extra hours associated with them.
> Consequently the actual number of courses taught by any given individual is > variable. Most faculty teach the equivalent of 5 course titles, most of > the time, but this varies from year to year and from individual to > individual. Moreover, an individual's load is not necessarily distributed > evenly across the two terms. One might teach 12 hours 1 term and 6 the > next. This procedure for assigning teaching loads has been in place since > the early 70's and works very well.

> Timothy E. Moore, PhD, C Psych
> Department of Psychology
> Glendon College, York University > 2275 Bayview Ave.
> Toronto, Ont. M4N 3M6

> (416) 736-2100 ext 88355
> 487-6738 (departmental office)
> 487-6851 (fax)

> <http://www.yorku.ca/research/lamarsh/moore.htm>